Excerpt: .in the harbor, it is true; but as soon as a favorable wind sprang up, all was commotion on her deck. The sailors ran hither and thither at the captain s, word, hauling ropes and swinging the yards about to set the sails. The ship began to move, the anchors were hoisted, and the land gradually receded behind us, as if itself were in motion. The farewell hymn was sung, mingled with many prayers, addressed to the guardian deities, invoking a prosperous voyage. Soon the wind freshened, the sails filled and bore f the vessel on. Our cabin companion, a young man, came to us at the hour for supper, and courteously invited us to sit at his table. Satyrus had brought out our provisions, which we.-put with his; and we talked as; we shared the supplies. My friend, I said, whence come you?...
