Excerpt: . . . REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SCHOOL SANITATION, HYGIENE, AND PHYSICAL TRAINING. BY WILLIAM A. MOWRY, HYDE PARK, MASS. , CHAIRMAN. We are living in an educational age. The electric light is turned in full blaze upon the schoolroom. The American system of public schools is under discussion and subject to criticism everywhere. Within a few years past great changes have taken place, and important improvements have been introduced which have affected all grades and all phases of educational work. The curriculum has been materially modified. The colleges are enlarging and developing their work on every side. They have demanded a more extended preparation from the secondary schools. In turn, the high schools and academies have required larger and better preparation from below. The enlargement and enrichment of the course of study in the elementary schools has been the result. These transitions are hardly yet settled into permanence. In methods of instruction the changes have been, if possible, greater still. The preparation of teachers has received renewed and enlarged attention: School architecture, especially in the large cities, has been greatly improved, and the work of supervision has now entered upon new lines, where its importance is beginning to be properly appreciated. It will thus be seen that within the present generation important improvements have been made all along the line of public school work. It is remarkable that with all the discussion and all the improvements in these different directions, so little progress has been...
