Noel Indianapolis, Ind. In times of war States and nations are impelled to resort to many forms of taxation of property and of business which are considered oppressive, but are borne by loyal people until the necessity has passed. In no time of great national exigency has any country resorted to taxation against an individual upon the value of his life insurance nor upon the funds of life insurance companies retained solely for the maturity of contracts. In 1862 it was proposed by the National Congress that a tax be levied upon life insurance funds. The proposition was little favored, and Charles Sumner on that occasion made his oftquoted speech in which he inaccurately referred to such a taxation as a tax upon a tax. Mr. Sumner, in characterizing a...
