Excerpt: . Lieutenant Grant to advance, and the latter was to retire on Palel on the first convenient opportunity. The history of this letter was that the old cook who, as already stated, had been sent to Tammu, had, on his return to Manipur, shown it to the Regent, who had read the letter, and seeing a good opportunity of ridding himself of Colonel Howlett s force, had sent it out to Thobal. With these distinct orders before him Lieutenant Grant had no option but to seize the first convenient opportunity to retrace his steps. He had beaten the enemy three times, and though they were in the villages in his rear, they were too disorganised to do him much harm. That evening there was a tremendous thunderstorm, of the kind which comes when the monsoons break in this part of the country. Getting his...
